A collection of vibrant, savage, poems intimately tracing the death of a nameless concubine in the burning Imperial harem. A single tragic spark in the conflagration of a fading age.

(Warning, snuff poems, graphic images contained)

The Kenmu Restoration, like many periods in Japanese history ended in an explosion of national conflict, where worlds and ideas break upon each other with untamed hate. The Emperor's last bid for power has lit the entire nation into rebellion, his champions have all fallen around Kyoto, the rest had flocked to the stranglehold of the traitor Ashikaga brothers. With the Emperor and his chosen men fled, his palace, and his weeping women are left alone before the bloodstained army, everything that was once his, will soon belong to the inheritors of the next age of Japan:

The Samurais, and their Shogun are coming.
