Unveiling the Magic of Art Poems

What are art poems, you may wonder? In essence, they are the harmonious fusion of visual art and written poetry. John Tomko's art poems seamlessly fuse his striking visual creations with poetic expressions, offering a multi-dimensional experience to the audience.

Each art poem tells a story, conveys an emotion, or evokes a reaction. As you gaze upon the painting, you are enveloped in a world of colors, textures, and shapes. And as you delve into the accompanying poem, your mind is transported to a place where words dance on the page, igniting your imagination and touching your heart.

The Power of Words and Colors

John Tomko has mastered the art of color manipulation and poetic expression, skillfully weaving them together to create a profound impact. The colors he chooses speak volumes, evoking various emotions and enhancing the overall narrative of each art poem. From vibrant and energetic compositions to somber and contemplative works, his diverse range of colors adds depth and complexity to his creations.

Moreover, Tomko's poetry is nothing short of brilliance. His words flow effortlessly, painting vivid pictures in the reader's mind. Whether it's a heartwarming love poem, a thought-provoking introspection, or a passionate outcry, his poetry strikes a chord within your very being.

The Beauty of Imperfection

Tomko's art poems often embrace the beauty found within imperfections. His brushstrokes are deliberate yet raw, capturing the essence of humanity with all its flaws and vulnerabilities. The accompanying passages mirror this notion, exploring the intricacies of the human experience with profound introspection and understanding.

Through his art poems, Tomko encourages us to embrace our imperfections, to find beauty in our vulnerabilities, and to cherish our uniqueness. He celebrates the human condition, reminding us that it is through our flaws that true beauty and strength emerge.

While in the throes of a manic episode (he was diagnosed with bipolar disorder in his twenties), John Jerome Tomko penned a letter to the woman he loved and later married. The return address on that envelope said “Percy Shelley, Cloud Lane.” John wanted dearly to be a poet -- and, undoubtedly, he was.

From his younger years, to his days as a graduate student studying literature, to his middle and senior years, he wrote verse, as well as hauntingly beautiful letters. He even sketched and painted. He so yearned to be published, but, during his lifetime, he only saw one poem in print -- in a college magazine. His work, though, deserved to see the light of day.

In this book, his beloved daughter presents many of her father’s works for all the world to share. Indeed, dreams do come true.

"Four days later, our family said . . . Goodbye." Some hurts, they hurt us for a moment. Some hurts haunt us forever. It brought me joy and more than a bit of pain as I read and reflected on the words of a beloved father and husband as his devoted daughter immortalized him by sharing his words with the world. John's words take us from, "somewhere in the land of lost dreams," to 'what a place to celebrate birth.' I have often felt that the bipolar people of the world hurt harder and love deeper. John's words take us into the deep end of the reflection pool. Rest in peace, John Tomko, as we reflect in peace." -- Greg Wooley, father, friend, and fellow sufferer, author of Rise and Shine poetry
