She spent her life working for this career. But is it the future she really wants?

Smart, hardworking, and at the top of her game, Ruby is a cut-throat corporate businesswoman who pours her heart into her job. Despite growing up in a small town, her dream was always in the city – and she spent her entire life studying so she could escape and make it big.

But when a seemingly routine job lands her with a surprise visit to the tiny town of Wrightsville Beach, North Carolina – just hours away from where she grew up – she’s not sure if she’s ready to revisit that chapter of her life. And after she bumps into Lucas, the boy she was madly in love with in high school, it forces her to face old memories that she’d long-since buried.

Ruby still finds Lucas just as charming as she did when she was a kid, but there’s one problem – her company is supposed to be buying his grandmother’s inn. Torn between her dedication to her job and her growing love for the quaint, whimsical seaside town, Ruby is faced with difficult questions about what she wants to do with her future – and if she can bear the idea of giving up the corporate job she worked so hard for.

Can Ruby find a way to have the best of both worlds? And what will become of her and the now grown-up Lucas?
