Yelena can see the future. By laying her hands upon other human beings her visions portend both good and ill. She inherited the gift from her Gypsy grandmother who carefully instructed her on how to use her power. As she came of age in Russia, Yelena discovered that to see the future and to change it were two different things. Growing old in America, a country far from her beloved home where she grew up, Yelena gradually learns the full extent of her power while making friends at the tavern where she works cooking meals and dispensing wisdom to those who will listen. Will she stay true to her visions and find salvation in her gift of foresight? Or will she gradually succumb to the lure of alcohol and the forgetfulness it brings?
